APPENDIX III OPENING OF THE BIRMINGHAM EXCHANGE IN 1865 Mr. S. S. Lloyd was one of the speakers at the opening of the Exchange Buildings in Stephenson Place, Birmingham, on New Year's Day 1865. The construction of the Exchange was greatly needed, and it has proved an immense convenience to the mercantile community of Birmingham and South Staffordshire. After prayer had been offered by the Rector of St. Martin's (the Rev. J. C. Miller, D.D.), giving especial thanks for the many blessings the Almighty had permitted us to enjoy in this land, and after speeches by the Mayor, Alderman Thomas Lloyd, and others, John Bright (then M.P. for Birmingham in conjunction with Mr. Scholefield) having spoken, Mr. S. S. Lloyd followed by proposing the Members for the Northern Division of the County (Messrs. Newdegate and Bromley-Davenport).¹ These gentlemen, he said, were too well known--the senior member at least--to need any words of commendation from him. They represented a peculiar constituency of mixed interests--of agriculture and manufacture. They represent a community in which widely different views are held on political subjects; and it was all the more interesting a constituency, he should think, for Members of Parliament to represent on that account. They had been told by their respected and most able junior borough member (Mr. Bright) that industrial success waxed and monarchs' power waned. Now he trusted he would be permitted to say that the commerce of this country, and the industrial interests of this town, which had waxed almost more than history gave any example 1 I am indebted to Mr. Wm. Wright of Moseley for the report of this speech, which was given in the Birmingham Daily Post of January 2, 1865. of, were a very good example of...

desire to re-create the past, than to set out on such an enterprise. To write the history of a family! The biography of an individual, even a dull one, offers almost too many attractions, and certainly too many distractions, to the really sympathetic pen; but when one is made free of a whole race, to pick and choose where one will, to dally as long as one will or as briefly, one's labour can become more fascinating than the old moralists would ever have liked it to be. Resorting to imagery, one might liken the biographer of an individual to the navigator of a river from its source to the sea, always in the main stream; and the biographer of a family to a similar navigator with an extended charter, who even before embarking spends much time among the springs in the mountains whence the river flows, and, once afloat, urges his boat down every tributary, however small, and into even, backwater.
